COLLECTIVE ACTION: This newsletter is based on reports from 150 journalists in nearly every district, working together to give the most up to date coverage of the election. We are also working with the Community Radios Forum (FORCOM) and the Human Rights League.

First district election results

Below are tables with the first 27 district election results. All should have been published by last night, but counts are continuing in some places.

Dhlakama wants to negotiate a unity government

Afonso Dhlakama believes he won the election last Wednesday and is telling diplomats he wants a national unity government. He is calling for negotiations to lead to a unity government which would then totally restructure the state apparatus and security forces to remove Frelimo influence. There would then be new elections in two years.

He is stressing that this is not about winning or losing elections. He says this was not a real election, and that diplomats should not accept in Africa an election which would not be acceptable in Europe. Thus he wants support for a unity government that would finally bring democracy to Mozambique.

In particular, he is maintaining the implicit threat of violence. Young Renamo supporters attacked polling stations in Tete and Ihla de Moçambique on Wednesday, and Renamo has not demobilised or disarmed the men who attacked the N1 road in Sofala. He is telling diplomats that he does not want violence, but his supporters are angry and he is not sure he can control them. And his comment at the press conference Saturday was enigmatic - "violence is not necessary" if Frelimo negotiates and is not itself violent, as he said the "Frelimo police" were on polling day.

Dhlakama is citing as examples the national unity governments in Kenya 2008-13 and Zimbabwe 2009-13. In Kenya in disputed elections on 27 December 2007, incumbent President Mwai Kibaki of the Party of National Unity was declared the winner of the presidential election but opposition candidate Raila Odinga of the Orange Democratic Movement called for mass protests, some of which became violent. Finally in April 2008 the unity government was agreed with Kibaki as President and Odinga as Prime Minister.

Odinga was the leader of the EISA election observation mission last week. In its preliminary statement the EISA mission "urges all parties to pursue legally established channels to resolve any disputes that may arise relating to the outcome of these elections."

Comment: Dhlakama believes he has won all elections since 1994, and makes similar demands after each election. In 2009 he promised demonstrations and for four years continued to say there would be demonstrations soon. Finally there were attacks in the N1 road in Sofala in 2013.

Clearly Frelimo will not accept a unity government. Its bottom line in the 1990-92 Rome peace talks was that Renamo had to accept the legitimacy of the government and constitution, which Dhlakama finally agreed. But the importance of the Kenya example is that there was high level international mediation, Odinga was finally given a senior post, and the government was hugely expanded to create relatively unimportant ministerial and vice-ministerial posts for Odinga's party. Dhlakama hopes that diplomats will put pressure on Frelimo and the government to make major concessions, even if not granting a unity government. jh

Observer reports

Many of the international and national observer reports, in English as well as Portuguese, are posted on our website: <http://www.cip.org.mz/election2013/>

EISA and Carter say publish detailed results

In their preliminary statements. EISA and the Carter Center both say the CNE should publish electoral results by polling station to increase transparency. The detailed results of the 2009 election have never been released, even though a cd-rom exists.

"In its assessment of the context and conduct of the 15 October 2014 elections the EISA Observation Mission has come to the conclusion that the election in Mozambique were generally peaceful and in conformity with the laws of Mozambique and the international continental and sub-regional standards. The Mission particularly commends the CNE's professionalism in managing the electoral process."

The Carter Centre also noted the problem of lack of party-nominated MMVs and delegates in some polling stations, caused both by the failure to provide accreditation and the inability of the opposition parties to find enough people. Carter Centre estimates that at least 1000 party agents were not accredited. Of the 434 stations observed during the polling process, 20% were missing some polling station staff (MMVs), typically one or more of those nominated by political parties. During the voting process, the Carter Center and EISA observers noted that Frelimo party delegates were present in 98% of polling stations observed, Renamo in 61%, and MDM in 63%. In 18% Frelimo was the only political party represented. Some stations observed had more than one delegate present from the same party, and in the majority of these cases, the agents were from Frelimo, in violation of the CNE rules which said a party could only have one delegate. (The three main parties have a right to two people in the polling station, one MMV and one delegate or poll watcher.)

22 polling stations attacked in Tete

Notícias reported yesterday (Saturday) that 22 polling stations in Tete were vandalised Wednesday by Renamo, preventing voting, 10 in Tsangano district and 12 in Macanga district. It cited the president of the provincial elections commission, Eduardo Sinalo. Notícias also reports Renamo-instigated electoral violence in four other Tete districts: Angonia, Chifunde, Moatize and Mutarara.
